II 閱讀測驗

All Bud wanted to do was talk to his wife Betty. They had been married for 56 years, until she passed away. As a way to remember her, Bud bought a park bench in her name.

Every day, Bud would visit the bench with some flowers and tell her about his day. But one winter, heavy snow covered the park. The snow was so thick that Bud could only drive close to the bench and talk to Betty from his car. However, two park workers, Jared and Kevin, noticed Bud. They had seen him many times before and were touched that he would still visit even when he couldn't make it to the bench. So they decided to do something about it.

The next time Bud showed up, Jared and Kevin had cleared all the snow to Betty's bench. They wanted to make sure Bud could still visit his wife every day. And they promised to keep the path clear for him all winter.

16.（　　）Who were Jared and Kevin?
(A) They sold park benches.　(B) They were Betty's coworkers.

17.（　　）What is the best title for the story?
(A) Without Reach　(B) Betty and Her Bench

Habits are deeply rooted in our everyday routines. Thus, making changes can often be challenging. After some experiments, it was found that adding fun to an activity is a helpful ingredient. Let's take a look at some examples.

There are those who enjoy grocery shopping, and there are those who just want to get things done quickly. To help the second group enjoy the activity more, a grocery shop in Germany attached* skateboards* to some of their shopping carts. Shoppers could use the skateboard to slide across different aisles* and even back to their cars after paying. Those who used regular carts were also smiling as they watched. In another example, a trashcan was built as if it were the "world's deepest bin." It made a long falling sound when items were thrown in, which encouraged people to throw waste into the bin rather than on the ground. The result? Trash put into the bin increased by 41%. It's clear that fun can help people change for the better!
