Sustainable development might seem like a difficult job for a person. However, there are a few things we can do together in our day-to-day life to make a difference. First, you can use energy-saving light bulbs. They use 25% to 80% less power than regular bulbs, so they not only help the planet but also help your pocket. Also, use the 15-minute rule. If you're going to leave a room for more than 15 minutes, turn the lights off.
The shortage of water is also a big problem in India, South Africa, and other countries. Therefore, saving water is also a great way to help out Mother Nature. One way to do this is to use low-flow shower heads. A regular shower head uses about 15 to 20 liters of water per minute, but only about 6 liters of water are used with the low-flow shower head per minute.
Last but not least, take the bus or the MRT when you travel around, and bring your own bottle when you need to buy a drink. Let's do these things and we might be able to help the sustainable development.
