Because marigolds grow in autumn, they are seen everywhere __10__ this time of year, including in parks and around public buildings.

(A) Starting from the main gate, you can climb up the steps and enter the main entrance to the shrines.
(B) As you take in the beautiful sights, you will notice hundreds of stone foxes throughout the area.
(C) This famous shrine dating back to the eighth century is a form of dedication to the god of agriculture.
(D) Kyoto is a travel destination that holds many beautiful, impressive sights, with Fushimi Inari Taisha as the most memorable for many.

A trip to Kyoto would not be complete without visiting the magnificent Fushimi Inari Taisha*. With seemingly endless rows of bright red “torii” dotted across a densely wooded mountain, it is quite the sight for travelers everywhere and the setting for some famous movies like Memoirs of a Geisha.

__25__ Over the centuries, as Japan transformed itself from an agriculture-based society to an industrial powerhouse, the shrine became important for bestowing* luck in business. Fast-forward to the current century, and Fushimi Inari Taisha is one of Japan’s most popular shrines, acting as the head shrine for over 30,000 Inari shrines scattered across the country.

The entire area consists of five shrines, spanning across the stunning slopes of Mount Inari. __26__ Once you’ve passed through the gate, a dance stage emerges where the “mikos,” or shrine maidens, perform traditional dances during yearly rituals*. Located just to the right of the dance stage, there is a small sub-shrine called Higashimaru-jinja*, where many come to pray for academic* success. Here you can admire the sight of thousands of paper cranes, which the Japanese believe bring good luck. Another pathway wanders four kilometers up the mountain, with dozens of smaller sub-shrines lining the way.

__27__ Considered as messengers of Inari, the stone foxes are often looked upon as Inari, too. They often hold a key in their mouths, which symbolizes the key to the rice storehouse.

__28__ Be sure to put this stunning cultural site at the top of your list the next time you plan your trip to Kyoto!
