請選出最適當的答案；每題 5 分，共 20 題 In 1967, the United States' space program had its first big accident. Three astronauts died in the fire. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) began a new program to help stop future fires and decided to make a mascot. It found the perfect choice in Snoopy, a very popular dog in the comic Peanuts. The dog loved the idea of flying and dreamed of going to space. Now, astronauts usually touch the huge toy, Snoopy, for good luck before they leave the Earth. They also wear Snoopy pin on the uniform and put a small Snoopy toy in their pocket to help them remember to be safe. Interestingly, in the comic stories, Snoopy and his flying dog house did land on the moon four months before the first astronauts in 1969. _____ 1. There are many ways to describe Winnie the Pooh: A lover of honey, a daydreamer, or Christopher’s best friend. Perhaps the best way is the “bear of very little brain” that live in Hundred Acre Woods.

A.A. Milne’s first story book about Winnie the Pooh was published in 1926, followed by a second book in 1928. The character was a huge success. However, he didn’t just create the character himself. The idea was actually from a real bear. During World War I, a Canadian soldier named Harry Colebourn bought a baby bear from a hunter who had killed its mother. The bear was called Winnipeg or Winnie for short, and became the mascot for Colebourn’s brigade later. When Colebourn went to France to join the war, he sent Winnie to the London Zoo for safekeeping.

During the years that the bear lived at the zoo, it became very popular with the visiting children, including A.A. Milne’s son, Christopher Robin. The boy loved the bear so much, so he decided to name his teddy bear Winnie. He added “Pooh” to his bear’s name to remember a swan that he had met on vacation. Finally, the teddy bear became the inspiration for Milne’s world-famous yellow bear.
