(1) Did you know that the logo for fashion giant Versace is actually based on Greek mythology? The Italian luxury fashion brand is well-known for its logo of a woman with long hair. In fact, though, the logo is based on the Greek goddess, Medusa. And the hair on her head is not actually hair but poisonous snakes. According to the Greek myths, Medusa had the power to turn anyone who looked at her into solid stone. Therefore, whoever was unlucky enough to fall in love with her would not be able to run away. And this is just what the designers of Versace’s logo had in mind. For this global fashion icon, they wanted a logo that would demand attention from people of all walks of life. Therefore, they decided on Medusa as a way to create a strong presence on the fashion runway*. And it’s very clear that they’ve succeeded in doing just that. Well done, Versace!

(2) As an eco-friendly vegetarian, I simply love fruits and vegetables. Since I know fruits and vegetables rely on bees to produce the next generation, I love these tiny creatures too. The role they play in producing crops is important, and the world’s entire food supply would be affected if they were to disappear.

Unfortunately, bee populations worldwide are already dropping. As a result, many farmers in China and Brazil have been forced to either give up planting certain crops, or pollinate* them by hand. This is a slow and very difficult task, and usually requires workers to walk up and down a field carrying a paintbrush and a small pot or jar. After collecting the pollen* from one flower, they need to do the job bees normally would, and brush it onto the next one. Otherwise, the flowers simply won’t turn into fruit!

If we don’t start protecting bees soon, the rest of the world might also have to start producing crops in this way. If we’re not careful, we might all have to be as busy as bees one day!

6. What is the main idea of the second paragraph?

(A) It is difficult and tiring to pollinate plants by hand.

(B) Brazil and China are working hard to save bees.
