The woman sat quietly on a bench. I had already seen her 36 the third time. A train arrived, but she didn't 37 any of them. Then, I saw her stop 38 for the announcement. 39 and joy filled her face. It seemed 40 she was just listening to the voice that said, "41 the gap." She wasn't causing any trouble. 42 the stationmaster, I decided to talk to her. I wanted to check 43 anything was wrong. But when I approached her, she spoke to me first. "The voice. It's different. It's not his," she said. She became a little 44. She told me the 45 recording had been of her late husband's voice. 46 she missed him, she would come to the station. That way, she could hear him "47." But the subway system had replaced her husband's voice 48 a new recording. Five days later, she came back. This time, she heard her husband's voice once again. Her teary eyes shone 49 happiness. "Thank you. I can go on from here now," she smiled 50 reply. Then she stepped on the train.
