My name is Tiger. I used to be a proud dog when I was the apple of my master’s eye. We lived in a big house and I was little Johnny’s best friend. He played with me and stayed with me all the time. I thought my life would never change. One day, my master brought back a new pet and then the family slowly lost interest in me. I was dropped off on the street, and I started my new life as a “homeless dog.” Now every day I have to avoid the dogcatcher in order not to be caught. Besides, I am often chased away by people when I want to find something to eat. This is why I am always hungry. When I see a pet being walked by its master, I feel jealous and hope my master will come looking for me. However, I know this dream will never come true. There is only one thing I am happy about: I am not alone. My friends, like me, are unwanted, but we will never give up on the idea of returning to our old homes, or even to new ones.						When it comes to social events in Taiwan, there are some important things you should know. On some occasions, Taiwanese people don’t usually arrive on time. For example, when a wedding banquet starts at 7:00 p.m., you may actually plan on arriving at 7:30 p.m. Drinking alcohol is one of the most basic elements in interpersonal relations. This is because in Taiwanese male culture communication is not emphasized, and drinking becomes a form of compensation*. You are expected to remove your shoes when you enter a person’s house, and you may even be offered a pair of indoor slippers at the door. Give and accept business cards and gifts with both hands. This shows respect. The Taiwanese culture emphasizes filial piety* or respecting one’s elders. This means providing one’s parents with the things they need and noticing and respecting their wishes and preferences*. Finally, in most social situations you should avoid discussing politics, or you may start a heated argument. *compensation n.[U] 補償 *filial piety 孝道 *preference n.[C] 偏好
