IV. Reading Comprehension: 《2% x 4=8%》

Long before spoken language evolved, the earliest humans used gestures and hand movements to communicate with each other. This original sign language evolved over time into a more complex visual form of communication that includes hand movements, finger spelling, and gestures to represent words and express ideas. Although it is known that sign language has been used since ancient times, no one ever developed a formal sign system until 1755.

That year, Abbé Charles-Michel de l'Épée of Paris, France founded the first school for the hearing-impaired and created French Sign Language (LSF) system. LSF was the first sign language to actually be recorded and taught to others in an educational setting.

In 1817, Thomas Gallaudet and Laurent Clerc started the American Asylum of the Deaf and Dumb in Hartford, Connecticut. At first, Gallaudet taught his students LSF system that he had learned while he was in Paris. But then, he noticed his students communicating with each other using signs that they had made up among themselves. This informal sign system finally mixed with LSF system to become American Sign Language (ASL).

Most countries from around the world have their own languages of sign, and an international sign language has recently been developed. However, ASL is still considered one of the most standard sign language systems in the world. In fact, ASL is the third most used language in the United States.

At one time, only the hearing-impaired were taught to use sign language. Today, colleges are offering more sign language courses for credits and are even considering sign language to meet foreign language requirements. Also, ASL has been successfully taught to language-delayed children and hearing babies as young as six months old.

Sign language has benefited the hearing-impaired community for many years, and now it seems that everyone, the hearing-impaired or not, from babies to adults, may benefit from learning this unspoken language.
