In the 1950s, a lot of people in the US had laws to keep black people separate from white people. Black people were forced to use different drinking fountains, go to different schools, and even sit in different parts of the bus, with only white people allowed to sit at the front.
One day in Montgomery, Alabama, a black woman named Rosa Parks was riding the bus. It started getting crowded , so the driver told her to move to the back and let a white person sit in her seat instead. Rosa felt this was unfair. She was tired and did not want to stand at the back. So, she refused to move. The police came and Rosa went to jail. Although she went against the rules, lots of people felt Rosa was inspiring and brave. Soon plenty of black people started refusing to ride the bus till the law was changed. Therefore, the bus companies lost much money, and the government was forced to change the law. These days, black and white people can sit where they want, and other unfair laws have also been changed.
