There are many reasons why Taichung has become known as Taiwan’s cultural center. Not only does it have wonderful museums and art shows, but it is also home to Rainbow Village.

Like many of the old villages that used to house soldiers and their families who came from China to Taiwan, Rainbow Village was in the process of being torn down by the government to make room for newer buildings. However, one person remained in the village, and his name is Mr. Huang, also known as Rainbow Grandpa. He wanted to bring some life to the dying village, so he began to paint cheerful and colorful images of animals, dolls, airplanes, and many other figures on the village’s walls.

Soon Rainbow Village attracted the attention of locals, who asked the city government not to destroy it. When the government realized Rainbow Village was becoming a popular tourist attraction, it agreed not to tear it down. Today, Rainbow Village is a top attraction in Taichung and draws around a million people to the area each year.

One night, a man woke up and couldn’t fall back asleep. It was four in the morning, the hour at which his father used to wake him each day so he could milk the cows. That was fifty years ago. Still, he had kept the habit of waking up early.

Instead of returning to sleep, he recalled a time when he was fifteen. It was a few days before Christmas, and he’d overheard his father talking to his mother.

“I hate to wake up Rob in the mornings. He’s growing so fast and needs his sleep.”

Hearing these words, the boy suddenly realized how much his father loved him. His parents were always too busy with farm work to talk about loving their children. With this knowledge, he decided to give his father a special gift for Christmas.

At a quarter to three, he snuck into the barn, milked the cows, and cleaned up. When he finished, he quietly went back to bed.

Soon, he heard his father’s voice. “Rob! We have to get up, son, even if it is Christmas.”

The boy stayed in bed, while his father went to the barn. Minutes later, he returned and gave his son a big hug. “Son, I thank you. Nobody has ever done a nicer thing.”

His father is now dead, but he still remembers that special moment on Christmas day when he gave his first gift of true love.

53. When does the man usually wake up?

(A) Four o’clock in the morning. (B) Five o’clock in the morning.

(C) Three forty-five in the morning. (D) Late in the morning.

54. How did the boy know that his father loved him very much?

(A) He realized that his father had trained him to do farm work to be more independent.

(B) He heard his father say that he did not want to wake him up so early in the morning.

(C) He discovered that his father was busy making money so as to save money for his education.

(D) He knew that his father was secretly preparing a special Christmas gift for him.

55. Which of the following statements is true?

(A) The man’s father did not like the gift from his son at first.

(B) The man gave his first gift to his dad when he was sixteen.

(C) Christmas means a lot to the man because it reminds him of the time his father gave him a special gift.

(D) The man continued waking up early in the morning for many years.
