(A) captain (B) organ (C) altitude (D) mode										What you eat before you board a plane can change how you feel in the air or even after you land. Fast food, for example, can upset your stomach because fats can lead to blocks in blood flow. Foods like broccoli or cauliflower can make our bodies swell since the pressure in the cabin is lower, leading to an uncomfortable feeling. Drinking is just as important as what you eat, too. Alcoholic drinks cause the body to lose water, making you thirstier. Soda should also be avoided because the bubbles will expand like tiny balloons in your body. Lastly, treats like cake or candy are not great to eat before a flight, since they contain non-natural sugars. The body is not designed to process these types of sugars well, and so they can cause swelling, gas, or make you run to the bathroom often- not what you want on a long flight! Try to avoid these foods the next time you fly, and you will enjoy your flight much more.
