(3) There once lived a generous king. He is kind, but the people were unhappy because he did nothing but ate and slept all day. They worried about him and their future because of his health. One day, the king woke up and couldn't move! Feeling afraid, he gave doctors everywhere a reward to help him to be healthy again. They gave many ideas, but nothing worked. Finally, one morning, a holy man visited the country. He had heard about the king, and said he had a cure. Upon hearing this, the king agreed to meet him. However, the holy man had one condition: the king must meet him at his place to be cured. Unfortunately, the holy man lived far away from the king, and the king would have to walk there. After much effort, the king made the journey. When he arrived the place, the holy man wasn't there. His assistants said he would come back the next day. This happened for two weeks, and each time he couldn't meet the holy man or receive treatment. Gradually, the king felt better. And he realized there was no cure at the holy man's place and that he became healty because of the walking. Even with all the money in the world, it was useless trying to buy his health. This shows us that we need to keep health on our own.

8. What is the passage mainly about?

- (A) How the king got sick. (B) How useless walking was.
(C) How the king recovered. (D) How people stay healthy.

9. Why were people in the country unhappy about the king?
