The woman sat quietly on a bench. I had already seen her twice. Trains came and went, but she didn't get on any of them. It seemed 46 she was just listening to the voice that said, "47 the gap." She wasn't causing any trouble. As the stationmaster, I decided to talk to her. I wanted to check 48 anything was wrong. But when I approached her, she spoke to me first. "The voice. It's different. It's not his," she said. She became a little 49. She told me the 50 recording had been of her late husband's voice. 51 she missed him, she would come to the station. That way, she could hear him "52." But the subway system had replaced her husband's voice 53 a new recording. Five days later, she came back. This time, she heard her husband's voice once again. Her teary eyes shone 54 happiness. "Thank you. I can go on from here now," she smiled 55 reply. Then she stepped on the train.
