Although the motto of Google's code of conduct is "Do the right thing," officials in the European Union (EU) have accused the company of some 41 practices. In fact, the technology company has already been fined several times in Europe.

Google's problems began in April of 2016 when the EU charged Google with preventing competition in the smartphone market. EU officials stated that Google, being the leading company in this market, 42 to keep others from competing and gaining market share. Google reportedly 43 its partners to install Google Search and Google Chrome on their smartphones in order to have full access to the Google Play store app. Google has also been accused of paying some Android device makers to install Google Search on their phones.

A year later, Google was fined 8 million US dollars for similar practices in Russia. It was also ordered that google 44 other search engines to be used on Android. Then, in June 2017, EU officials fined Google a massive 2.7 billion for using the Google search engine to make Google Shopping more popular. This fine was the largest in the company's history.

the EU has assembled a panel of experts to look into even more of Google's business practices in Europe. In addition, concerns about privacy have already caused problems for Google in Germany and France, and a new EU law in 2018 will make it possible to fine technology companies for privacy violations.

Margrethe Vestager, EU Commissioner for Competition said, "What Google has done is illegal 45 EU antitrust rules. It denied other companies the chance to compete on the merits and to innovate."

三、閱讀測驗 (5 題，每題 2 分，共 10 分)

In the past, the Silk Road was one of the most important trade routes in the world. It connected countries in the East and the West, and it encouraged commerce, while allowing for an exchange of products, ideas, and even cultures. Now, thousands of years later, a new type of Silk Road is being established—the Belt and Road Initiative.

The official name of this project is actually "the Silk Road Economic Belt and the 21st-century Maritime Silk Road." It is also known as the Belt and Road (B&R). Basically speaking, it is a large-scale development project that is meant to increase commerce and cooperation between Asia, Europe, and Africa. The Belt and Road Initiative was first announced in 2013, and it has been championed by Chinese President Xi Jinping.

In fact, Chinese President Xi Jinping is so committed to the project that he has promised US$124 billion for the Belt and Road Initiative. Much of this money will be spent on strengthening China's own infrastructure, but at least US$9 billion will be spent on improving the infrastructure in developing countries that are a part of this trade route.

Some experts claim that Chinese officials are now looking to international trade as an alternative because economic growth in China slows. Chinese President Xi Jinping once said that free trade was an important engine for development. He has also promised that the program will bring about win-win cooperation and mutual benefit, and not become a "game between foes."

However, some critics worry that the program is just another way for China to expand its influence in the region. And a few wonder if the project can be successful in developing countries that are politically unstable.

Yet, many say that the Internet is already making the Belt and Road Initiative a necessity. Today, millions of people are using e-commerce sites like Alibaba to buy and sell products, and all of these products must be shipped between countries in the East and West. As this e-commerce continues to grow, the infrastructure that the Belt and Road Initiative promises to build will become increasingly important.

Clearly, the Belt and Road Initiative will play a major role not only in the growth of China, but also in the growth of trade between the East and the West in the 21th century.
