1. Traveling is a good way to learn about the culture of other countries. Sometimes, foreign customs can be so different that I am surprised. This kind of experience is known as culture shock. On my recent trip to Singapore, I had some perfect examples of this.

I landed in Singapore after a four-hour flight and headed to downtown to meet up with my local friend. After meeting up with him, I took out a piece of gum to chew, so I could feel more awake. My friend whispered to me, “Don’t you know that gum has been banned* since 1992?” I nervously asked, “Am I going to be arrested?” He laughed and explained that selling gum is not allowed in Singapore, and gum can only be bought from a drugstore with permission from a doctor. While chewing gum is legal, it is not welcomed. This was because people were doing improper things with their chewed gum such as spitting it out on trains and causing the doors to stick. Moreover, the rule kept the country clean. After hearing this, I threw away my gum immediately. Now I know not to bring gum next time I go to Singapore!

*ban vt. 禁止

- () (1) What is the passage mainly about? (A) The laws in Singapore about gum. (B) One person’s culture shock experience. (C) A doctor’s advice about chewing gum. (D) A happy trip to Singapore.
- () (2) Which of the following is true? (A) The author was arrested for chewing gum. (B) Anyone can freely buy gum at a drugstore in Singapore. (C) Gum was not banned until 1992 in Singapore. (D) The author didn’t care about the gum rule in Singapore.
- () (3) What does the word “improper” mean as used in the passage? (A) Unacceptable. (B) Direct. (C) Friendly. (D) Suitable.

2. When Tom stepped out of the airport in Moscow, he was greeted by a gush of cold, dry air and the sound of people speaking Russian. Everything was completely different from his home country of Taiwan.

Since Tom was studying the Russian language, he decided to visit Russia as an exchange student for a semester. Although he knew a little Russian already, it was difficult for him to communicate with others at first. In addition, the culture in Russia was also very different. His first impression of Russians was that they were very cold. In public, he never saw people smiling or laughing, and no one was interested in chatting with him. Later, he realized that this is just part of the culture in Russia. People don’t smile at strangers because they think there is no reason to do so. However, once Tom became friends with some local students, he realized that Russian people are actually very friendly and welcoming.

Although Tom had to deal with culture shock in Russia, he was still glad to have the opportunity to go abroad. For him, meeting local friends and having an open mind helped him make his experience a positive one.

- () (1) What’s the best title for this reading? (A) Common Habits of Russians (B) Making Local Friends in Russia (C) Foreign Students’ Life in Russia (D) Experiencing Culture Shock in Russia
- () (2) According to this reading, what helped Tom have a positive experience in Russia? (A) Having an open mind. (B) Being good at Russian. (C) Reading books on Russia. (D) Always smiling at strangers.
- () (3) What can we learn about Tom from this reading? (A) He has some relatives that have been living in Russia for years. (B) He planned to stay in Russia for about half a year. (C) He hadn’t learned any Russian before he went to Russia. (D) He found Russians very friendly when he first got there.
