III. Reading Comprehension Questions (2*5=10%)

People who do more than one job to earn money, known as "slashies," are growing in number. Why? Firstly, people get to have more control over life, doing the things they like to do. Secondly, instead of being stuck with doing the same job forty hours a week, slashies get more variety in their lives. Lastly, they usually have more flexible working hours. However, working as slashies comes along with its downsides. Their jobs usually don't come with health benefits or holiday pay. On top of that, their work schedule can be busy and tight. Last but not least, slashies may find themselves working far more hours than forty hours a week. At the end of the day, everyone has his or her own career goals or priorities. There is no such thing as the right or wrong decision. You are the only person who knows what is right for you, whether it is choosing a stable job or being a slashie.
