a.) Malala Yousafzai is an inspiration to people all over the world. Born in Swat Valley, also known as “Switzerland of Pakistan” in 1997, Malala was raised up by her father, who was a teacher and ran a school in their village. The peaceful life changed after the town was 1 the rule of the Taliban. The extremists prohibited many things, including owning a television, playing music, and girls were informed that they could no longer go to school. 2, Malala’s father encouraged her to continue schooling in her teens, when most Pakistani females gave up education and got married. The fearless young activist 3 publicly on behalf on girls about girls’ right to learn. At the age of just eleven, she even started blogging about the difficult situation in Pakistan 4 by the Taliban. As a champion of equal rights for female students, it’s not surprising that what Malala had done 5 the Taliban leader.

On October 9, 2012, a brutal attack carried out by the Taliban 6 the world. On her way home from school, a masked gunman boarded her school bus and asked, “Who is Malala?” Then, he shot her 7 her head. After the shooting, her incredible recovery and return to school resulted in a global outpouring support for her 8 made her a household name overnight. Inspired by her efforts, over two millions of people signed a statement to ask Pakistani government to accept the policy on equal education. 9, they were forced to implement it to treat boys and girls alike. In addition, Malala Fund was built up to become an organization to empower girls through education. 10 all the difficulties and challenges, Malala remains a steadfast advocate for the power of education and for girls to become agents of change in their communities.

b.) For around a century, the Walt Disney Company has entertained the world. Thanks to Walt Disney, a great dreamer, continued to dream throughout his life, 11 difficulties to fulfill his dream. Over the years, his company has delivered people many inspirational messages 12 its memorable characters, animated movies, TV shows and so on.

Walt Disney’s road to success is an inspiring example itself. In his younger years, he was passionate 13 drawing. All he wanted to do was 14 popular cartoons. While he was faced with lots of failures and frustrations, he found his successful career 15 creating Mickey Mouse, and built an entertainment kingdom to weave dreams for numerous people. 16 this cheerful little character, others in animations like Mulan and Zootopia delivered similar positive messages. In Mulan, though being a female puts Mulan at a disadvantage in a traditional eastern society, she takes advantage of her wits to solve gender-related problems. Similarly, in Zootopia the little bunny 17 of being a policeman takes on challenges to prove herself when no one takes her seriously. These examples echo Walt Disney’s philosophy: never give up 18 your dreams. He sent messages to the public that his success 19 from a childhood dream and a humble mouse. If there is something that you truly want to accomplish, no one can stop you 20 reaching your goal. Only by wishing upon a star and putting every possible effort into your dream can everyone make their dreams come true.

II. Reading Comprehension (12%): (共 8 題，每題 1.5 分)

- a.) As all the baseball players fixed their eyes on the pitcher, they looked completely focused. They all hoped to stand out in this tryout and be chosen to play in the World Cup. Sadly, no matter how well they performed, they could hardly receive any attention from the media simply because they were women baseball players. Women playing baseball are usually discriminated against. General people believe what girls or women should play is softball, which is considered safer and better for ladies. A.G. Spalding, the founder of a famous sports goods company, who made baseball popular, even announced in 1911 that baseball should be all-male, for women were not strong enough to play the game.

Yet, the origin of women baseball can be traced back to 1830s, when women played in baseball clubs, on amateur teams and at schools. In 1931, Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig were struck out by a 17-year-old girl, Jackie Mitchell in a warmup match. Many female baseball players had great performance, such as Mamie “Peanut” Johnson, who pitched among male players for a couple of seasons. Women’s teams formed and attracted greater attention during World War II. However, in 1952, Major League Baseball banned women from signing contracts with baseball teams. They said that women’s bones were weaker than men’s and that female baseball players ran a higher risk of getting breast cancer because their chests often got hit and neither of them was convincing. Female baseball players continue to be neglected, which is nothing but a result of sexism.

21. What is this passage mainly about?

- (A) The historical development of female baseball.
- (B) Great women baseball players in Major League Baseball.
- (C) How women master baseball skills to become professional players.
- (D) The unfair attitude people take toward female baseball players.

22. Which of the following is most likely to be the special feature in the sports section of newspapers during World War II?

- (A) The picture of girl baseball players.
- (B) The interview of male softball players.
- (C) The announcement of banning women’s baseball.
- (D) The analysis of softball games.

23. What year marked the fall of women’s baseball?

- (A) 1830
- (B) 1911
- (C) 1931
- (D) 1952

24. Which of the following statements is true?

- (A) Jackie Mitchell struck out Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig in many Major League games.
- (B) Mamie “Peanut” Johnson was not allowed to play in any baseball game after 1952.
- (C) It is widely believed that girl baseball players are as good as boy players.
- (D) Some excuses were made up to stop women from playing baseball.

We were first taken here in December as parts of a Hanoi Street Food Tour. [1]The flavors of Bun Bo Nam Bo were amazing and left a sensory memory in my brain that stayed for the rest of the month. We returned to Hanoi yesterday and went back for dinner tonight. A month ago, we shared portions; tonight we had full bowls and oh boy, it was out of this world! [2]No frills, inexpensive and great with a beer.

[3]This place seems to deserve its good reputation, although I worry that it's being "spoiled" by excessive tourist numbers. At peak times, there are often lines of people out of the door...and more backpackers than locals cramming the tables. I wasn't able to give the place a try on my last visit. However, it seems to have a major lull between the obvious meal times, particularly in the morning. I looked in at about 9:30 am one day last week, and found it deserted—the breakfast rush having just passed.

Their trademark Bun Bo Nam Bo—a beef salad with plenty of lukewarm rice noodles, on a bed of lettuce—is certainly very good, and quite a generous portion. [4]But it is priced at 65k—but you can get this dish for 35 or 40 from many back-alley vendors.

They have a few other dishes as well, which might be worth going back to try—although when the place is too busy, they get impatient with people hesitating over their order.

[5] This place is hard to find even with Google maps. We got help from local people to show us the location. The restaurant is narrow and packed with hungry locals and tourists. [6] We ordered Bun Bo Nam Bo. Quite honestly, it was way too greasy to me, though it was reasonably priced. [7] Hygiene could've been improved coz I had diarrhea that night.

25. What can be inferred from Danny Yeh's review?

- (A) He left this comment after his visit to the restaurant.
- (B) His son loved the food as well.
- (C) The beer was cheap and awesome.
- (D) He thought highly of the restaurant.

26. What does the word “lull” mean in MaxLL’s review?

- (A) A quiet period of time.
- (B) A big discount on the dish.
- (C) A large amount of food.
- (D) A great atmosphere at the restaurant.
