三、閱讀測驗 (5 題，每題 2 分，共 10 分)

You may have heard of Spain, but have you ever heard of Catalonia? Catalonia is an autonomous community in the northeast of Spain, and it is one of Spain's wealthiest regions. Its history dates back to the unification of Spain. Today, it is home to more than seven million people, many of whom consider the region separate from Spain.

On October 1, a referendum on independence was held by the Catalan government, and it was unfortunately marred by several violent incidents. Clashes broke out between the Spanish riot police and the voters, and ballot papers and boxes at the polling stations were seized by officers. Nearly 900 people were injured, and controversies over whether the referendum was legal arose – while Catalonia's government claimed that the police prevented people from voting, the Spanish prime minister, Mariano Rajoy, claimed that the Catalans had been “fooled” into participating in the independence referendum that was illegal and against the Spanish constitution.

According to the Catalan government, 2.26 million of the 5.3 million registered voters voted, and 90 percent of these voters supported independence. However, the result was not as overwhelming as it seems since the turnout was only 42.3 percent. Catalan officials said 770,000 votes could not be counted because the polling stations were raided and shut down by the police.

On October 11, Catalonia's president, Carles Puigdemont, has postponed a formal declaration of independence, while the Spanish prime minister has given the Catalan government 8 days to retract the independence bid before Madrid suspends the region's autonomy. Catalonia is divided into separatist and anti-independence, and the tension and political uncertainties in Spain remains.

After Germany, France and Britain all announced their plan to ban petrol and diesel cars by 2040 to reduce carbon emissions and accelerate the development of electric vehicles, China soon followed. Xin Guobin (辛國斌), vice-minister of industry of China, announced that the ministry had been working on relevant research, and that the policy of outlawing gasoline-powered vehicles will be implemented in the near future.

Being the world's biggest market for automobiles, China manufactured and sold more than 28 million cars in 2016. Over the past few years, the government has carried out a tax reduction on electric cars as it aims to conserve energy and ease pollution, especially in Beijing and Shanghai. Recent sales figures have shown that Chinese consumers are favoring new energy vehicles, and the number of electric cars sold in China has increased by 60 percent. Car manufacturers in China are also compelled to produce more vehicles that do not rely on fossil fuels by 2020.

“These measures will promote profound changes in the environment,” Xin told CCTV. “Enterprises should strive to improve the level of energy saving for traditional cars, and vigorously develop new energy vehicles according to assessment requirements.” Although it is not clear when the ban will come into effect, it is apparent that petrol cars' days in China are numbered. Some experts predict that the ban will be introduced in 2040 at the earliest. Several foreign automakers have revealed that they will boost the production of environment-friendly vehicles in China, and more than 12,000 new charging stations will be built by the government before 2020 to meet the demands of new electric cars that are on their way.

 (D) It is still not clear when the fossil fuel car ban will be implemented in China.
