In Indonesia*, there is one very special way to make coffee. People feed coffee beans to the civet*, a cute, furry animal. Then, they collect the beans from the animal’s dung and use them to make coffee. Drinkers say this coffee is really delicious and smooth. It can be sold for up to US$100 per cup, and this makes it one of the most expensive coffees in the world. Many coffee shops in other countries even buy civet coffee from Indonesia.

However, there are some problems with the civet coffee industry. Civets are often kept in very small cages. They are forced to eat large amounts of coffee beans to make more civet coffee. They are also kept awake all day, even though they should sleep during the daytime. One animal protection organization found that these animals were not healthy at all. If you see civet coffee on a café menu, it is best not to order it.

When we think of bugs and insects, we usually think of them as being “dirty.” But a recent report by the United Nations says that we should all eat insects. Experts believe that eating bugs could be the solution to the world’s hunger problem. This is because bugs are high in vitamins* and easier to produce compared to beef or pork.

Although dining on insects might sound gross, these bugs have been eaten for thousands of years. In fact, two billion* people around the world eat insects regularly, and there are about 2,000 types to choose from. The most commonly eaten insects are beetles, bees, and ants. They can be eaten sweet, salty, or in sandwiches. But don’t worry, eating bugs will not make you sick. These tasty creatures are washed and cleaned before they are cooked.

Even so, it’s hard to imagine a day when we will be buying barbequed spiders as a snack. What do you think about eating insects? Would you be brave enough to try a baked cockroach or honey-flavored ants?
