Since the Taipei Mass Rapid Transit (MRT) system plays an essential role in this city nowadays, it is hard to believe that the system was only constructed in the 1980s and opened in 1996. From then on, the system has grown rapidly, and today, over two million trips are taken on the Taipei MRT every day. At the same time, the number of stations in this network has also increased to 131. Of all the current Taipei MRT stations, however, it is the Nanjing Fuxing Station that has drawn the most attention as of late.

It is the organic farm, known as “Metro Fresh”, operating inside this Metro station. This small farm uses the latest technology to grow plants indoors, ensuring that these vegetables are not only organic but also free from pollution. This type of farming also provides better control of certain factors, such as temperature and humidity, and the opportunity for a year-round supply of fresh vegetables. At the moment, the vegetables grown in this location can be purchased by passengers on the third floor of the station.

In addition, Metro Fresh is meant to serve as an educational tool that can help both local elementary school students and the MRT passengers in introducing new farming technologies.

Although the Taipei MRT system has only been around for a few decades, its growth and development seem promising, especially if innovative programs like Metro Fresh organic farm at the Nanjing Fuxing Station continues to be introduced.

Just as the world appeared to be getting over the COVID-19 global pandemic, a new international health threat may be starting to rear its ugly head—monkeypox. Already declared a national public health emergency in the United States by the Biden administration and a global public health emergency by the World Health Organization (WHO), monkeypox has some people worried, though others predict that this outbreak will not be as severe as COVID-19, especially if vaccines can be distributed quickly and effectively.

Monkeypox was first discovered in a lab in Denmark inside monkeys, and this is where this virus got its name. The first human case did not occur until 1970, when a nine-month-old boy in Africa was infected with the virus. The first major outbreak of monkeypox in the United States occurred in 2003, and in 2022, multiple cases have been reported in the U.S., the U.K., Canada, Australia, and mainland Europe.

Unlike COVID-19, which is highly infectious and spread via tiny droplets, monkeypox requires close—often prolonged—physical contact to be spread from person to person, or animal to person. Experts say that it can also be spread by touching infected items, such as towels or bedsheets.

Fortunately, effective vaccines for monkeypox already do exist, although so far there have been some problems in getting these vaccines to those who need them, especially in the United States. It can only be hoped that the lessons learned from the response to the COVID-19 pandemic will help in the fight against this new (and growing) international health threat.

() 43. Which of the following can be inferred about the vaccines for monkeypox?

- (A) In essence, the vaccines for monkeypox are quite similar to those for COVID-19.
 (B) Though current vaccines for monkeypox are quite effective, they are potentially fatal to children.
 (C) Once the problem of distribution is solved, the spread of monkeypox can be contained to some degree.
 (D) Scientists around the world are still trying their best to find more effective vaccines for monkeypox.

() 44. What's the third paragraph mainly about?

- (A) How COVID-19 and monkeypox differ in their ways of spreading.
 (B) Why both COVID-19 and monkeypox pose a great threat to humans.
 (C) The animals from which COVID-19 and monkeypox originate respectively.
 (D) Ways of preventing people from being infected with COVID-19 or monkeypox.

() 45. 請從下列(A)到(E)中，選出關於monkeypox正確的選項。(多選題)

- (A) The first confirmed human case was a baby in Africa.
 (B) It was first discovered inside some monkeys in the wild.
 (C) It can be spread by touching infected towels or bedsheets.
 (D) Its first major outbreak in the U.S. didn't occur until 2022.
 (E) It is highly infectious and can spread through tiny droplets.
