(1) It isn't easy to be different. Akara, a 14-year-old boy from Thailand, went to America on a student exchange. He soon found out what it felt like to stand out. Akara's new school was in a small rural* town. As the only Asian kid, he was not treated well. Some students even called him names because of his appearance. However, Akara had one friend. It was Kyle, his host brother. The two of them walked to and from school together every day, and Kyle often spoke encouraging words to Akara.

One day in the school restroom, Akara accidentally heard Kyle talking with his friends. Kyle said that he talked to Akara only because his parents made him. Akara was so hurt that he couldn't face Kyle weeks afterwards. Eventually, Akara told Kyle why he was upset. Kyle immediately said sorry to him. The two became closer after that. With time, Akara's classmates also began to see what a funny and friendly kid he was. Finally, they saw him no longer as different but as one of their peers.

* rural adj. 鄉村的

10. Why was Akara treated badly at school?

- (A) Because he had a terrible appearance.
