My best friend's Indian wedding last year reminded me of the interesting cultural differences that exist in this world. Unlike the usual one-day weddings in the States, Indian weddings usually last at least three days. It was a large event with over 300 people, as Indians tend to invite all of their friends and family members.

The main wedding activity took place in a large, grand room. Buffet stations were set up outside and servers* stood behind each station. I got so hungry as I eyed the huge selection of food, which included oven-baked bread, various types of curry*, spiced chicken, and vegetables. I also couldn't ignore the selection of desserts that included Indian ice cream and sweets made from nuts. Another Indian friend explained that these types of food were mostly from North India. If it had been a South Indian wedding, the food would have been mainly vegetarian* and included many different rice dishes. They would have been served on banana leaves with no utensils provided. Who knew there could be such cultural differences in food alone?

- What would be the best title for the passage?
 - Cultural Differences: My Experience at an Indian Wedding
 - My Terrible Experience at a South Indian Wedding
 - A Cultural Difference that Embarrassed and Shocked Me
 - How to Serve Food on Banana Leaves
- According to the passage, which of the following is true?
 - Traditional Indian weddings usually only last for a day.
 - At South Indian weddings, rice dishes are not common.
 - Indian weddings always take place in the open air.
 - South Indian wedding dishes usually don't include meat.
- What can we learn from the very last sentence of the passage?
 - The writer now knows cultural differences only apply to food.
 - The writer did not expect Indian weddings to be so different.
 - The writer doubts whether food is an important part of culture.
 - The writer is known for having very different opinions on food.
- Why does the writer mention that South Indian weddings use banana leaves and no utensils?
 - To show that South Indian weddings are less formal
 - To highlight a unique dining custom different from North India
 - To suggest that the food quality is lower
 - To explain why the writer prefers North Indian food

5. Why does the writer include details about the wedding being three days long and having over 300 guests?

- To emphasize how different Indian weddings are from typical American ones.
- To show that Indian weddings require less preparation.
- To explain why the writer felt uncomfortable at the event.
- To show that the wedding was unusually small for India.

Corn has been consumed by Americans and people all over the world for centuries. Cornbread is made from corn and holds an important place in American cuisine.

When European settlers first moved to America, they discovered that the soil was not rich, so in many places, corn was the only thing that would grow. They used corn for everything from food to soap. However, eating "corn on the cob*" like we do today was not common. Most corn was ground into powder and used to make cornbread.

Soon cornbread became the common table bread. Each family had their own recipe that they would pass down to their children. Cornbread was especially popular because it was so easy to make and required few ingredients. The most basic cornbread can be made with just ground corn, water, oil, and salt.

As time went on and people became richer, they started adding other ingredients such as eggs, milk, and sugar. These additional ingredients changed the heavy cornbread into the lighter and sweeter cornbread we know today.

- What is the main idea of this passage?
 - Cornbread is consumed by Americans and people around the world.
 - Cornbread has become popular because it is easy to make and corn is common.
 - There are many ways to make cornbread, so cornbread has become popular.
 - Corn can be used to make not only food but also soap.
- Which of the following statements is true?
 - Corn on the cob was popular among European settlers.
 - Many cornbread recipes have been lost.
 - The cornbread today is heavier and sweeter.
 - Oil and salt are the basic ingredients to make cornbread.
- Why is corn a common plant across the US?
 - Corn can grow on poor soil.
 - European settlers loved corn.
 - European settlers brought corn to America.
 - Cornbread is badly needed.

Hannah had always been the type to take a lot of photos, especially of her baby sister, Emma. Their parents were away on a trip, so it was just the two of them in the house for a few days. It was a quiet, peaceful weekend.

On the second night, after putting Emma to bed, Hannah sat in the living room, scrolling through the photos on her phone. She smiled at the pictures of Emma playing in the garden, sitting by the window, and even one of Emma sleeping peacefully in her crib.

But as she swiped to the next picture, her thumb froze. There was a photo of Emma—except something was wrong. Emma was sitting by the window, just like in another photo. But the lighting was different, colder. The window was darker, the curtains drawn tightly shut. And in the corner of the photo, just behind Emma, there was a figure—pale, thin, and almost ghostly.

Hannah stared at the photo, heart racing. She didn't remember taking that picture. In fact, she had been sitting on the couch the entire time, far from the window. Slowly, she opened the next photo, hoping it was just a mistake. But it wasn't. In the next photo, Emma was no longer alone by the window. The figure was standing right next to her, barely visible in the shadows. Its hand was reaching out toward Emma.

Hannah's stomach turned. She grabbed her phone and went to check on Emma, though she told herself it was just a trick of the light or an illusion. She walked into the room, her breath shaky, and found Emma fast asleep, her small body curled up in the crib.

Relieved, she turned off the light and went back to the living room. But then, the phone buzzed. A new photo had appeared.

Hannah opened the new photo.

It was a close-up of the back of Emma's head, taken from just above the crib.

And standing behind Emma in the photo, in the darkness of the room, was a tall figure. Its face was obscured, but the shape of it was clear...

Hannah quickly checked the time.The photo had been taken three minutes ago.

11. What specific detail about the first strange photo caused Hannah to feel uneasy?

- (A) The figure in the photo looked familiar.
- (B) The photo was blurry and unclear.
- (C) The lighting in the photo was colder.
- (D) The curtains were open in the photo.

12. How did the second photo differ from the first one?

- (A) The figure was in a completely different pose.
- (B) Emma was no longer in the photo.
- (C) The photo showed a different room entirely.
- (D) The figure was closer to Emma and seemed to be reaching toward her.

13. Why was Hannah uncertain about taking the first strange photo?

- (A) She had been sitting far away from the window, not close to Emma.
- (B) She didn't remember taking any photos that day.
- (C) She thought someone else in the house had taken it.
- (D) She felt as if the camera had malfunctioned.

14. What emotional response did Hannah have when she checked on Emma after seeing the second photo?

- (A) She felt guilty for disturbing Emma.
- (B) She felt a moment of relief, as Emma was peacefully asleep.
- (C) She was angry that Emma had moved.
- (D) She was afraid Emma was hiding something.

15. What was the most terrifying part of the last photo?

- (A) Emma was smiling in her sleep.
- (B) The figure was standing right behind Emma.
- (C) The photo showed the entire house.
- (D) The photo had been taken just moments ago
